February 2015

We are a little over 1 full month into the calendar year and already we have seen countless talking heads and market prognosticators going on record with what they think the stock market will do this year. If you pressed me to offer a prediction, I would go out on a limb and predict that many of these so-called experts will be adjusting their predictions several months from now. The fact remains that it is impossible to consistently and accurately predict asset class winners and losers on a year over year basis. It is a theme we discuss quite frequently in these newsletters, but it bears repeating. Please take a moment and read the article we've included on the folly of trying to pick winners and you will see why these predictions are so impossible to get right.

If you are focused on improving your health this year, you may enjoy our feature on how choices you make about your physical well-being can also positively impact your finances. And our last item of interest this month includes a few tips for improving your golf game when the lousy weather forces you indoors.

Best,
